

MAY THE FORCE BE WITH YOU MAY 27

By Staff

Originally slated for a May 25 release, Disney+ announced late last month that they would be moving their series Obi-Wan Kenobi to a new premier date of May 27.

Star Wars was soon trending globally across social media sites and left many wondering if the move was a direct result of Netflix' announcement of Stranger Things 4 Part 1.

To sweeten the pot, Disney will release two episodes of the six-part limited event.

According to Disney, "the story begins ten years after the dramatic events of Star Wars: Revenge of the Sith where Kenobi faced his greatest defeat: the downfall and corruption of his best friend and Jedi apprentice, Anakin Skywalker, turned evil Sith Lord Darth Vader."

In addition to battling Darth Vader, Obi-Wan will have to face off against The Grand Inquisitor, Inquisitor Reva, and based off Reva's comments in the trailer, what is sure to be a slew of the galaxy's toughest bounty hunters. This might even open the door for an appearance of a young Boba Fett and his mentors Aurra Sing and Cad Bane.

So needless to say, Obi-Wan will have to keep one eye on Luke, the other on the Darkside, and call on the Force for a whole lot of luck.

It is not really a question of choosing sides here, but rather priorities.

So, which is first? Obi-Wan Kenobi or Stranger Things 4 Part 1?

Every wonder what it would be like to taste the metaverse? Yeah, you read that correctly and as it turns out, you are not alone.

It was only a matter of time, what with limited clothing in games such as Animal Crossing, and the hype-fueled market that is NFTs.

So, on May 2, Coca-Cola unleashed their second limited flavor under their new Creations umbrella: Byte.

You were able to taste space with Coca-Cola Starlight, having released earlier this year in late February.

The Zero Sugar cola, takes its inspiration from gaming and "invites you to explore what pixels might taste like with the refreshingly new, yet deliciously familiar, Coke flavor experience."

Along with the soda, which is only being released in 12oz cans, Coca-Cola has unleashed an entire line of apparel in addition to an online game.

If you were hoping to find Byte at your nearby liquor store, you will need to reevaluate your plan of consumption as Byte is only available online via coca-cola.com.

The offering is for a limited time.

Originally released in April via Circle K's fountain bar of drinks, Mountain Dew has bottled its Purple Thunder flavor in 18oz bottles.

The flavor claims to pack a burst of blackberry and plum flavors and contains artwork featuring said stylized fruits ready to hit the open road in style while on hot rods.

Mountain Dew has released previous concoctions that donned a purple hue, but this is the first time the brand have used plum as a flavor.

Look for the bottles now at your local Circle K.

The shoe would now be referred to as one that can be worn from "dawn to dusk" as a ploy to play up the comfort factor embedded within the shoe's design.

Needless to say, the three original colorways of the Go FlyEase sold out by early evening, with the two predominately black pairs going the fastest. Four of the five newer colorways were met with limited acclaim, and as a result have stayed in stock in nearly a full-size run (Light Army and Court Blue were not well received).

Visit Nike.com and search "go flyease" for additional product information.
